Is a bark with silvered oars, While the redd ning rays of sunset Fall in beauty on the shores. Sailing on to shores--the mystic--Led by subtle spirit forms Reaching out and upward pointing To a crown all free from thorns. Bright the morning, clear the day-break When the earthy pass away; Clear reflection in the waters When the tide shall ebb for aye. Nearer, nearer, floating slowly, Listless, still, the bark will be, Closer, closer, to the haven--Nearer, O, my God, to Thcel To JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY. Ueeting: -- Judged and sentenced, thou writer of themes Aglow with keen wit and pleasing day-dreams, Murmurings mellow, like -Running of Brooks Easy and flowing thro the shadiest nooks, Sunlight soft lingers i the leaves of thy books. What is the welcome we give to thy song? How is it gaged by the critical throng? It s not to...
