His eyes swept the wondrous scene before him; he saw the golden glory that bathed the steeple of the Catholic Church, the flaming glow on trees and houses and fields, and his heart thrilled as the first lark seemed to burst her throat with song, mingling her piercing note with the music of tinkling sheep bells and the lowing of cattle. Joseph listened, while the soft breeze fanned his face and stirred his hair that hung in long black locks. Are you glad, Joseph? said a voice softly. He raised his head, and the smile that had hovered on his lips turned into something more than a smile and became a benediction.
